Most people think diversifying is having a basket of stocks with some bonds mixed in. Yet when the markets crash, as we've experienced, stocks have a tendency to move in unison. These portfolio mixes have been lackluster at best. How do you truly diversify and give yourself the best chance to grow your assets overtime? How do you hire a professional money manager that invest in the items we use every day like gasoline to drive our cars, heating oil to keep us warm in the winter, wheat and meat to dine on, coffee and orange juice to drink, gold and silver for our jewelry (or teeth), currency exchange when we travel, interest rates for our bank accounts, cotton for our cloths, and lumber for our homes? With nearly two decades of investment management experience, Andy Abraham's Bible of Compounding Money is a must read for anybody who is serious about increasing their assets long term. Stocks have gone down to sideways. Real Estate has cave dived. Interest Rates are abysmal. However, Andy shows you how to find professional money managers (CTA's) who invest in diverse items through managed futures programs. Andy is not only a money manager himself, but successfully manages a family office that invests with these professional money managers. He's able to present the industry from both sides of the equation and put it into terms that the non-professional can grasp and understand. Andrew shares: • The keys to compounding • How to find the world class money managers • How to profit from the coming inflation attack • Why choose Trend followers • Common and easy mistakes to avoid • The best time to invest • How much to allocate to each program • Risk management Paul Singer, one of the best and smartest investors in the world, is most terrified by the one thing that every leading economist says will never happen: High Inflation! This book that you have been lucky enough to pick up could be what differentiates between success and failure!
