Boiling Point Judy Tucker

It's a week before Christmas in Tucson, Arizona. But disgraced ex-cop Jack Grady's not much into the usual festivities—or the unseasonably warm weather. Grady's just gotten his niece into rehab again, he's trying to rent a piano with rotten credit, take care of his mom—and simply survive. Then a boy waiting for his piano lesson blunders into a bloody scene: two classical musicians shot in a locked room, along with a kid who was delivering a pizza. Nancy Foster is dead where she lies. Paul Ross is pronounced in the hospital. The kid is gravely wounded. The forensics scream murder-suicide, and the cops are ready to pin the whole thing on Ross and close the case. But Ally, Ross's sister-in-law, isn't buying it. She hated Ross, but she's out to clear his name for the sake of his two small children. And she's convinced that Grady is the right man for the job. When he wants nothing to do with the mess, she drags him into it, dangling bait he can't resist. The “case” is hopeless, but Ally's the best thing that's happened to Grady in years. As he struggles to bury the darkest episode of his past, she's a shining promise. Then the truth of the present comes roaring at him. And he realizes to his horror that, while he's looking straight ahead, evil has a nasty way of attacking from behind.
